Statement

I have been honoured to be a Member of the Council of Lloyd's for three years. During this time, as with the previous 30 years of my career, I have endeavoured, where colleagues and clients permit, to continue to practice as a Lloyd's broker.

I have been very fortunate. I have worked with an extraordinary number of inspiring leaders – be they patient clients, knowledgeable underwriters or energised intermediaries. My career began as a broker with 18 employees. One move and many mergers later, I work at one that is a little larger than that. I have seen the benefits of scale, the need for team-based cultures, but have never forgotten the greater value found in personal relationships and an individual history of delivery. A market of the many, and the diverse, remains central to the Lloyd's proposition – be this private or corporate capital, multi-line or specialist underwriting, wholesale or retail broking, traditional or frontier markets.

We know the current challenge of depressed market conditions. Pressures mount in terms of business access and risk complexity. Nonetheless, with vigilant central leadership, intelligent transactional behaviour, close connections with historic clients and careful targeting of new opportunities by talented market practitioners, value will be found. This is not a given of course, and every endeavour around market structure and modernisation that enhances client access and reduces our cluttered and over-costly value chain must be embraced.

I have been honoured to assist in carrying the flag of Lloyd's to over 50 countries, with an emphasis in high-growth markets. My work continues to take me much of the time to Asia-Pacific and to Continental Europe. I firmly believe the opportunity for Lloyd's to advance its proposition on a basis that allows near term profitability and yet sustained investment in a world more connected than we have known hitherto is enormous. Emerging markets, emerging risks and indeed emerging individuals greatly interest me. Provided we respect our traditions and continue to attract talent, the future holds great promise for all of Lloyd's stakeholders.

Whatever one does in Lloyd's, almost whomever one is, it is possible to do something real, effective and to trade with people one likes. It is possible to constantly learn and consistently contribute. I am most proud to be part of the Lloyd's community, and hope to offer more to a society that has given more to me that I can ever give to it.
